

CORPORATE PARTNER FUNDRAISER OPPORTUNITY

"Annual alumni contributions make up the literal life's blood of colleges and universities, and they are even more critical to HBCUs. Annual alumni giving is key to funding the endowments that provide for infrastructure maintenance and expansion, funding scholarships and other financial aid, technology upgrades, attracting and retaining top administrators and faculty, and more.

However, according to the results of a survey of HBCU alumni giving published by U.S. News & World Report earlier this year, the average giving rate of participating schools was only 11.2%. That means barely one out of every 10 alumni bothers to make an annual contribution to their alma mater, or any HBCU. The report represented a stark contradiction of the outpouring of passion and enthusiasm exhibited—and hundreds of thousands of dollars spent—by alumni at HBCU homecoming festivities in the months following the release of the survey."

Online shopping is more popular than ever and we are making that possible in the fundraising industry.

When it comes to increasing visibility and funds for a nonprofit, it can sometimes feel like an uphill battle. From social media marketing to email campaigns and in-person events, your nonprofit has undoubtedly run the gamut to find what works and what doesn't. But for many nonprofits, especially smaller ones with few volunteers or support staff, business partnerships are an often-overlooked or underestimated avenue for growth. In reality, building a relationship with a for-profit business can be beneficial for both the business and the nonprofit.

There's one obvious benefit to nonprofit-corporate partnerships: every nonprofit could use financial support from a partner in the for-profit sector. But, as with any relationship, it can't be just about the money. Fundraising patterning with Global-Mpg can be easily implemented into your current fundraising schedule.
